

Example of a persuasive essay about covid-19

The Covid-19 pandemic has had a tremendous impact on our lives, from forcing us to stay inside and practice social distancing to radically changing the way we work, shop, learn, and interact. But while these changes have been difficult for many of us to endure, there is one thing that makes this period of upheaval worthwhile: it's potential to help us build a better future.

The first step in creating this future will be to create a mix of preventative measures that allow us to stop the spread of Covid-19 while still allowing people to lead relatively normal lives. This includes following guidelines such as wearing face masks in public, washing hands frequently, practicing social distancing whenever possible, avoiding large gatherings, and getting vaccinated when the time comes. By following these guidelines, we can lessen the severity of future outbreaks and reduce the strain on hospitals, frontline workers, and public resources.

We must also work to create a more equitable healthcare system that will better serve everyone in our society. This means providing more access to testing and treatment for all people regardless of income or status. It means using strategies such as reducing cost barriers for treatment and expanding Medicaid coverage so that those who are uninsured can receive care. We must also ensure that communities disproportionately affected by Covid-19 have access to necessary medical supplies, resources, and support.

Finally, we must strive to build sustainable solutions that will protect us from future pandemics while also addressing other pressing public health issues, such as climate change and pollution. This means investing in renewable energy sources, improving air quality, increasing access to healthy food options, and addressing the root causes of disease. By taking these steps now, we can create a healthier world that is prepared for whatever new challenges may come our way.

The Covid-19 pandemic has taught us many lessons about how to respond better to potential public health crises in the future. But if we are going to truly create a better future from this difficult period of upheaval, we must take bold action now to implement changes that will protect us from suffering through similar health emergencies again in the future. Together, we can build a healthier and more equitable world for everyone.