

Expository Essay Introduction Paragraph Examples

Introduction Example 1: Stress Coping Mechanisms

The word that probably describes living in big cities most accurately is “stress.” Indeed, the amount of responsibilities an average citizen must deal with on a daily basis, the numbers of people around, poor ecology, excessive workloads, relationship problems, and many other factors may affect our psychological condition greatly. Given that every person is unique, people develop different coping mechanisms in order to get rid of stress, or to at least alleviate its effects.

Introduction Example 2: How Racism Emerges

Racism is common in every country of the world, even if those countries’ governments are not willing to admit it. It is known that racism is a nurtured quality rather than an inherent property of people. Therefore, it is intriguing to investigate why people become racist or have racist tendencies. Racism usually stems from fear, a desire to be a part of group, and one’s upbringing.
